

Identifying a Support System

Identifying a support system can be challenging. Families tend to be concerned about letting others into their world. Having a network of support provides family members valuable outlets for managing the stress of recovery from substance use disorder. Each family member needs their own support and resources for the entire family.

